

Review of: "The Impact of Project Financial Subsidies on Project Achievement"

Hager Farhoud<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> University of Tunis El Manar

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The subject is interestingly directly linked to the assessment of a new reform that affects the national policy of Malawi, following the introduction of new reforms related to the allocation of financial resources to researchers and academicians.

However, the authors can start with a theoretical framework for assessing reforms in general, with a review of the literature, then present in a synthetic and structured manner the essentials of the new reform, the methodology, and the discussion of the results by comparing (before reform, after reform, and practices in other neighboring countries).

More specifically, the abstract should be reformulated to briefly indicate the problem, the objective, the originality, and the methodology used.

You should indicate what DFID is in the abstract.

There are also no keywords.

Take care of the form of the references.

In terms of the form of the manuscript, numbered sections are required.