

Review of: "How Competent are Health Professionals in Delivering Nutrition Education? A Cross-Sectional Study in Ebonyi State, Nigeria"

Udochukwu Ogu

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Provide more background information on the importance of nutrition education.

The introduction briefly mentions the importance of nutrition education, but providing more context on why it is important for health professionals to have competencies in this area can help to strengthen the argument. Explaining how nutrition education can positively impact patient care, improve health outcomes, and prevent disease can make the case more compelling.

Discuss the implications of the findings in the conclusion section.

The conclusion section briefly mentions the need for nutrition training for health professionals, but it would be beneficial to discuss the implications of the study findings in more detail. Explaining how the low level of competency in nutrition education can impact patient care, health outcomes, and public health can help to emphasize the importance of addressing this issue.