In the abstract, it would be good to consider adding the methodology used.

In the introduction, it should specify the specific aspects of poverty that will be discussed, given that it is a big spectrum. This point could also be made when talking about crime; even if they are just mentioned, what aspects of crime will be talked about?

It would be good to include a methodology to prove this correlation; it could be something simple, like some statistics, but it would give it a stronger argument to give recommendations.

Mostly, it would be good to be more specific about the factors that are mentioned; those could be explained in a deeper way, providing examples or case studies.

Using graphics would allow the reader to get a higher understanding of what is being talked about.

The conclusion feels short; it does not give away a true closure, given that it feels repetitive, and the words written in this part have been written in the earlier parts as well. Also, it should be clear about the findings obtained.
