The authors has meticulously conducted field work to collect the data from each sect of people affected by the oil spill. Though the data looks interesting, but the way it was discussed in the article was not convincing. More emphasis has to be given in addressing one set of data related to its outcome in the future. Without this the article looks just like data survey and report, detail interpretation is missing. If the author can address this then it will be interesting to relate the consequence of the disaster. Some part of the results and discussing looks monotonous, usage of same phrases and repeat sentences for different data. care should be taken to present those in different way.

Though the work is appreciated, proper presentation in the form of article is missing.
