Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article does not add anything new. It highlights the needs that librarians around the world are already familiar with, either because they have already read about this topic or because it has been or is part of their experience.

The worldview of the digital transformation of public libraries only embellishes the article. It is too general and does not serve the purpose of the article.

I suggest two alternatives to the author: (1) change the objective; or (2) change the methodology to a case study or a multicenter study with concrete data on public libraries in Bangladesh.

Be aware of the presence of redundancies that destroy the value of the article.

Also, pay special attention to bibliographic citations for pre-print articles. There are already tools to help you with this work (Mendley, Endnote, ...).
