

Review of: "Supply Chain and Digital Transformation of the Tire Manufacturing Company during the COVID-19 Pandemic: A Case Study of PT. X"

Muyanja-Ssenyonga Jameaba<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Gadjah Mada University (UGM)

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The latest version of the article remains almost intact , that is with the exception of the images at the end of the paper that are added, substantial improvement is lacking. The format of the article is not yet in line with what one expects of an academic paper. It unfortunately retains its outstanding features that are characteristic of a presentation rather than a work that is an outcome of a rigorously researched, analyzed, interpreted process. Academic work, while requires concise, clear, and complying with dictates of academic integrity, demands a streamlined, in-depth and connected process that show a clear link among components right from the introduction (where the author is expected to present the thesis statement about the topic, prominent and latest previous literature drawn from relevant theories, empirical work and practice, and research questions), methodology (presentation research design and methods that presents the approach or plan and techniques the author uses to find answers to the research question, including data collection, analysis and making interpretation, how the plan panned out and how such a process influenced results), discussion of analysis results that links results to previous theory , empirical research and practice, and how that informs future policy and future research), conclusion (expected to show the extent to which research results provide answers to research questions and policy recommendations (how research results should inform policy, society, practice that is relevant to the topic researched and future research. If the author produces an article that follows the above format, there is little doubt an academic work will have been done. Otherwise, it is as a good a presentation in a seminar , conference or lecture as any one can find out there.