

Peer Review

Review of: "Women Power in Family Matters from Perspective of Intersectionality Theory"

Gbadebo Adejumo¹

1. Psychology, Covenant University, Nigeria

Title

The title "Women Power in Family Matters" is clear in its focus on women's influence within households, but it has some limitations:

Ambiguity: The phrase "Women Power" is somewhat vague; it could refer to authority, decision-making, influence, or empowerment. Specifying the type of power (e.g., decision-making, economic, or social influence) would clarify the focus.

Grammatical/Stylistic Issue: "Women Power" is not standard phrasing. A more formal and academically appropriate phrasing would be "Women's Power" or "The Power of Women."

Scope: "Family Matters" is broad and unspecific. It could mean domestic decisions, child-rearing, financial management, or relational dynamics. Narrowing it to a specific aspect of family life would make the study more precise.

Theoretical Alignment: Since you are using Intersectionality Theory, the title could hint at this framework, signaling that the study considers multiple overlapping factors (e.g., "Intersectional Perspectives on Women's Power in Family Decision-Making").

Suggested revision:

- "Women's Power in Family Decision-Making: An Intersectional Perspective"
- "Intersectional Analysis of Women's Influence in Family Matters"

This makes the title academically precise, grammatically correct, and theory-aligned.

Declarations

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.