The authors, in my opinion, do not clearly distinguish the duality "consciousness-carrier of consciousness". The first is the spiritual principle, the idea, the principle of action. The second is the material principle, the material carrier of information. Action describes a physical system (the carrier of consciousness) and is not the essence of consciousness. Action can describe manifestations of consciousness of the elementary carrier of consciousness - an elementary particle called the Monad. The action can be represented by female and male dualities - quantum fields that correspond to four types of vibrations of "emptiness". The very idea that every action is a manifestation of one or another form of consciousness deserves high praise.
