Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

- 1.The methods of theoretical deconstruction, reconstruction and empirical testing mentioned in the paper are not fully reflected, and the argumentation of the arguments is more about citing other scholars' views;
- 2.The paper uses the Indonesian situation to explain the exogenous growth theory and savings-investment gap theories is wrong, whether it is partial generalization, that is, it does not consider that the situation in Indonesia is unique and special, and there is no situation in other countries for comparison;
- 3.Explain clearly how to achieve capital flight through loans, relying solely on the data analysis in the article is not sufficient;
- 4.The paper lacks specific cases to illustrate how foreign currency loans realize capital flight, and relying on some bank data alone cannot explain that capital flight is due to loans reasons, or there are other reasons.
- 5.I personally believe that the evidence for the paper's viewpoints is insufficient, the methods are insufficient to illustrate your arguments, and the factors considered are single and incomplete.
