The article presents an interesting comparative analysis between sustainable livestock development practices in Maharashtra and Jammu and Kashmir. The topic is timely and relevant given the increasing focus on sustainable agriculture and rural livelihoods. Overall, the article is well-structured and provides valuable insights. However, there are some areas that require clarification, expansion, or revision to strengthen the paper.

The introduction could benefit from a clearer statement of the research objectives and hypotheses. What specific questions or issues are the authors aiming to address with this comparative analysis? The literature review seems somewhat limited. Including more recent studies and articles related to sustainable livestock development in both regions could provide a more comprehensive background.

In the experimental section, it would be helpful to explain the criteria used for selecting the farmers or livestock systems for study.

Suggestions for future research or recommendations for promoting sustainable livestock development could be included.
