General comments:

- What was your research question? Was it the contents in terms of quantity and quality in sex education at French Public Schools? Or evaluating the adequacy of the sex education in French schools?
- The rationale of the whole research was based on a single report suggesting that sex education in public schools is struggling to deliver sufficient content??? How????
- The fundamental question should include if sex education in public schools (which is insufficient in terms of quality and quantity) had consequences later in life (among adults)? The substrate for your interview????
- Generally, your findings hold very little novelty compared to the previously carried investigations? Please address what novel findings can be interpreted to shape policy and practical interventions in sexuality education???

Specific comments:

Abstract:

- What is the ME TOO social activism movement? It should be briefly mentioned in this section, with more details in the methods if possible???

Introduction:

- What would be the typical consent setting?
- The research question should be placed before the research objective???

Methods:

- What would be added by displaying the sexual orientation of the participants?? And if necessary, it should be mentioned at the beginning of the results section???
- The rationale for “why including these age groups” for the study???
- How were participants selected (criteria), and invited???
- What automated data tools were used in this study???

Results:

- How was the translation of the scripts (responses) from French to English validated???
