Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Write a stronger structure: The introduction currently lacks a clear presentation of the points that will be addressed throughout the article. There's a need to draft a more precise and detailed introduction that outlines the objectives and key issues to be discussed in the article.

Incorporate section summaries: Each section should commence with a summary of the topics to be covered, aiding reader comprehension.

Establish a smoother connection between sections: Guarantee that each segment logically flows into the next to retain the consistency and coherence of the article.

Delve deeper into data and research: Many statements are based on statistics or studies but lack thorough discussion. Offering more detailed insights and analysis on how these figures were obtained and their implications would be beneficial.

Clarity and conciseness: Some sentences are overly lengthy and convoluted, making them hard to comprehend. Consider dividing them into shorter sentences and employing more straightforward language.

Language check: There are several grammatical inconsistencies and punctuation errors that require correction.

Draw accurate conclusions: The concluding section should effectively summarize the main findings and implications drawn from the article.

Balance of the content: The article appears unbalanced, with some sections providing more information than others. Ensure equal depth and detail across the sections.

Substantiate all claims with evidence: All statements should be buttressed with relevant data or research to reinforce the article's arguments.
