

Review of: "Palm Oil Expansion and Subnational Food Security"

Serena Sandri<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> German Jordanian University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article touches an interesting topic, which is politically very relevant for most of the developing world. The econometric analysis seems fine, too. I would however suggest to control for income in the regression, considering however that is is correlated with food security and with mobile penetration.

The explanation of results, however, could be improved, relying more on likelihood, as it is more common while using logit frameworks.

The article would also benefit from a discussion section, explaining what we can learn from the results and deriving some policy recommendations. Good luck!