

Review of: "How E-School Counseling Has Supported Learners Facing Pandemic Challenges: Results and Perspectives for Counseling Professionals"

Sugitha Sureshkumar¹

¹ University College London, University of London

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The authors have approached an important topic and pursued a valid methodology to answer the research questions. Although all parts of the paper are written well, I would suggest expanding, or specifying, within the methods section, what steps exactly were taken (succinctly). I would also suggest that the authors remove the references in the results and save those for discussion points in a subsequent section where they may add a sentence or two more on the analysis from these referenced papers as compared to their own study's findings. The results section itself is brief, and I wonder if this is due to a word limit; if not, it could not hurt to expand on this. As mentioned earlier, the 'discussion' could use more context to allow the reader to appreciate the context of the study (what other regions, studies, literature have said, etc.).

All in all, a well-written piece that would be suitable for publishing with some minor revisions. All the best.