The abstract is quite lengthy and dense. Consider breaking it down into more concise and focused sentences. The structure can be improved by clearly separating the problem statement, methodology, key findings, and implications. The introduction fails to provide detailed information on the inflation rate and economic growth in South Sudan for the period under review. This contextual information is critical for readers to understand the background and relevance of the study. Additionally, the introduction does not clearly discuss the research problem or the gap that the study aims to fill. Without a well-defined problem statement, the significance of the study is lost, and its contribution to existing literature remains unclear. The literature review is another area that requires significant improvement. It is outdated and does not incorporate recent studies that could provide a more current perspective on the issues being examined. Furthermore, the literature review lacks a theoretical framework, which is essential for grounding the research in existing theories and concepts. The methodology is inadequate, as the use of a simple regression method is not robust. Overall, the paper must undergo a thorough review process to ensure it meets academic standards and effectively contributes to the existing literature on inflation and economic growth in South Sudan.
