It's a good research area, but the implementation seems incomplete.

First, all parts should be reviewed one by one, with a scientific writing lens. Second, increasing the sample size is essential for it to be statistically significant. Third, a research cannot be isolated from scientific knowledge, the research problem and findings should be discussed in detail in the light of the literature. Fourth, the reader wants to know what the purpose of the research is, what methods are used, how the results are interpreted. It would be helpful to present these steps in detail in the manuscript. Finally, what it means to measure this level of knowledge, how this information can be used, in simple words, the usefulness of this research should be discussed.
