

Review of: "Assessment of Learner Satisfaction in Secondary School Education"

The basic argument of the article is a valid writing for the literature. however, some insights would be needed:

- deepen the scholastic context (how is the course of study structured? what is meant by academic success? I can imagine a comparison with my Italian reference system but it could be an incorrect comparison)
- deepen the concept of "satisfaction" (being a partially subjective variable how can I say that x is more satisfied than y?)
- update the literature (if possible, insert more recent sources so that the bibliography is current)
