A well-written review to emphasize the importance of the antimicrobial effect of medicinal plants. With a lot of antimicrobial resistance developed against most drugs, considering these herbal plants can be a safe alternative. More data on how the articles were selected for the review can be presented. Since it is a narrative review, the strength of evidence can be too low for practitioners to adopt the use of Ganoderma species in their regular practice in the treatment of diabetic foot. A more systematic search of the literature and presentation of evidence is warranted.
