

Review of: "Empowering Minds: The Evolution of Higher Education in Tamil Nadu towards Innovation and Excellence"

Solomon Arulraj David¹

¹ British University in Dubai

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The paper is not written in a standard journal article format.

The methodology of the research missing. If this is a theoretical / documentary research, necessary methodology for such approach has to be included.

The paper lacks a strong historical overview with necessary authentic references and documents to support the arguments presented in the paper.

Given the nature of the paper the evolution of higher education in TN, it is recommended that the paper accounts a strongly method to do a historical research with necessary referencing to government orders, policies both from central and state governments.

As the study topic seems to propose innovation and excellence, it is also important to account the voices of key stakeholders (if possible) rather making mere speculations without strong evidences to from both documents and by account stakeholder's voices.

The number of references for a documentary research is not sufficient.

The writing quality could be improved and the paper could be proof edited before submission.

The paper needs major revision before it could be considered for publication.