The Review article entitled "A Comprehensive Overview on Pharmacological and Therapeutic Insights of Solanum nigrum Linn" represents a very comprehensive and complete article. It is well written in English. As a suggestion, all scientific names of plants should be written in italics. The taxonomy of Solanum nigrum, not all, should be written in italics. It will be very useful to cite some common names of Solanum nigrum around the world; this contributes to the article reaching more people who don't know the scientific name but do know a common name. I suggest that all the findings of each kind of biological activity should be concatenated, not presented as a list of the findings of different authors. It is very useful to include the commercial names of some products and the patents. Please review the bibliography to ensure it is correctly written; some chemical formulae need subscripts or superscripts, etc.
