

Review of: "Medical Profession in Nigeria Since 1960"

Mahmood Qureshi¹

¹ Aga Khan University Hospital, Nairobi

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article is a bold review of the Medical Profession in Nigeria since 1960. While it may be viewed as being critical of practitioners in Nigeria, it highlights the challenges that face healthcare leaders and administrative agencies that are responsible for maintaining quality health care for the population in their country. It will encourage a culture of introspection within the health care system and result in measures being taken to ameliorate the impact of poor clinical governance within the Nigerian health care system. The authors should be commended for such a bold initiative. The article merits publication