Thank you for the pleasure of reading this beautifully written and very coherent article. The article is for the spiritually inclined. It poses the most basic dilemmas of our existence in a user-friendly style.

While reading, I found it hard to resist the questions of the use of language and the meaning of our intellectual pursuits. Are they purposeful avoidance of truth? I imagined Sibyl's son as Isaac at the Akeda, of the Buddha, and the selectively mute. They all encompass the very same duality of matter and consciousness.

I look forward to reading more of the author's thoughts on this evocative topic and hope to read the original story, which I regret I have not read, before returning to Sartre's nothingness.

Thank you again,

Mitchell Becker
