First of all, I would like to thank you for reading the article. An extremely important topic is presented. Processing the history of a nation will always be an interesting question. What I would suggest is that the identity of historical grief and wounded collective identity (Máté-Tóth András, 2022) would perhaps frame the question even more clearly. The question for me is what causes someone to not be able to move on. What kind of process causes the obstruction? For me grief is a possible answer. In this case the Dual Process Model (Stroebe & Schut, 1999).

The process and complexity of grief could perhaps open the perspective in the article, this is my view. Thank you for the opportunity. All the best!
