

Review of: "Online learning during the COVID-19 pandemic, lessons learned and what's next?"

Caoimhe Clerkin¹

¹ Queen's University Belfast

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This article aimed to investigate practices that could make online learning as fruitful as traditional learning. I fully agree with the importance of this investigation however I felt that this article failed to fully explore these practices. This paper, in my opinion, was a review of how online learning is being conducted across the globe. There was little evidence presented to highlight how, for example, online social interactions benefit student learning. I think this article could be strengthened by focusing more on these best practises, with the support of the literature. I wish the author the best of luck