This article is an interesting insight into the challenges and strategies for maintaining sustainable, affordable, and low-cost housing for the middle and low-income classes in Uganda, giving us a complex understanding. This reality is similar to that of other countries that have to face numerous challenges, including high land prices, limited access to finance, inadequate infrastructure, as well as a low knowledge of low-rise construction and a sustainable way of using natural resources, increasing the environmental impacts. Finding a cheap way to have energy and recyclable water is a point that we must pay attention to.
