This article is one of the articles that discusses in general the problems faced by the world today. The content of the article is very interesting, it has combined several fields of science in one topic, not only health but also social, economic and technology. However, examples of measurements to answer the issue should be described in detail if the measurements can be described quantitatively. In addition, the urgency of the problems in the countries studied are not clearly identified in the background. Overall this article has a good novelty and is an era of research transformation in digital issues
