Reviewers and Suggestions for the Article "Indigenous Community Life During the COVID-19 Pandemic":

1. Title: This title is good; it explains everything discussed in the research. Even though the issue of Covid-19 is no longer relevant, the impact of Covid-19 can be discussed.
2. Abstract: The abstract provides a structured and concise general description of the research and already includes research objectives, methodology, main findings, and conclusions.
3. Introduction: The introduction provides a good background but can focus more on the problem to be researched. Authors must explain the importance of this research in the context of the COVID-19 and post-COVID-19 pandemic in indigenous communities.
4. Research Methods: The methodology section must include the steps taken in the research and editorial process until conclusions are drawn.
5. Results: The research results have been found, but it is necessary to present the important points found.
6. Discussion: The discussion should explain the findings in more applicable language, identify research limitations and how they impact science and indigenous communities, and provide suggestions for further research.
7. Conclusion: The conclusion is specific and made in the form of points found.
