

Review of: "Agile Learning: An innovative curriculum for educators"

Ming Min Cheng¹

¹ National Sun Yat-Sen University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Overall, the paper is well written and addresses the core principles and implications of agile in practice. I have a minor comment. Having the rationale or the results from the empirical studies for the Agile-related competencies, transversal competencies, and digital competencies would strengthen the benefits of applying Agile methodologies in the classroom. In addition, the discussion should be more dynamic with respect to the similar studies.