Review of: "Fishing Rods for Magic: Theatre Forum Tools to Support Primary School Students' Active Engagement in Computer-Supported Collaborative Storytelling"

Alireza Memari[1]

1 University of Exeter

I reviewed the article focusing on computer-supported collaborative storytelling with great interest and enjoyed reading it. The paper is well-organized and very informative and relevant for the international readership. The paper covers and addresses both theoretical and practical aspects of the subject and makes a balanced focus on each of them. I suggest some points which I hope can improve the quality of the article:

I believe the paper is somehow anecdotal and there needs to be more references from the literature from similar studies and their findings.

It would be more helpful if the steps and procedures were presented in a clearer way so that the reader could follow them easier. For example by using graphs, flowcharts, or other visual aids.

Except for the above mentioned points, the paper was reader friendly and illuminative for me.

Good luck with your research.