

Review of: "[Commentary] Commentary on Sociocultural Beliefs and Systems Restricting Women's Access to their Marital Property Rights in Pakistan"

Bidhya Shrestha

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

A good start toward women's marital property rights. The author examined relevant literature and theory to illuminate the concept. It's incredibly interesting to consider how socio-cultural beliefs and the system. Despite having such good issues, this article fails to provide analysis as promised in the title. Various factors prevent women from exercising their marital property rights, however, the author simply addresses some problems without explaining why they are the only ones. This article included literature's facts like "despite their awareness and positive attitude towards..., the belief that women should be given marital property rights with the provision under both law and religion, contradicts the reality of the matter..., despite the knowledge, the struggle to get their rights.." It would be preferable if the author backed up these claims with relevant local or global statistics to support their assertions. Finally, the main thrust of the author's argument for this article is absent since it belongs in the background section and also lacks the conclusions with main argument.