

Review of: "We Don't Have a Health Problem, We Have a Village Problem"

Salwa Mohammad¹

¹ Health Department, Government of Balochistan, University of Balochistan, Quetta, Pakistan

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This review is up to the mark and highlights various aspects of a community, particularly where communities face diverse health problems, as well as social and political issues. The study effectively goes beyond medical concerns, emphasizing the importance of addressing social issues that can contribute to building a stronger community. It focuses on individual mental health challenges, such as identifying loneliness, and emphasizes the need for interaction and association within society to identify its shortcomings. The author has thoroughly covered the overall aspects of community well-being, citing strong references from previous studies on similar communities. However, the author should improve their focus on bringing developing communities to the forefront. Studies need to be conducted to identify issues faced by villages.