The methodology employed in this article demonstrates boldness; however, to ascertain the therapeutic efficacy, undergoing rigorous medical trial phases, including animal trials, is imperative. The current results lack reliability, veiled in uncertainty. Furthermore, the study authors need a paraclinical approach to substantiate the effectiveness of their findings. In terms of the text, it is well-written with no significant issues, except that the treatment section in the abstract should expound on patient conditions, age, and sex. This study qualifies for publication in this journal as a case study, contingent on the authors presenting a protocol to substantiate their hypothesis in subsequent publications.
