Review of: "The Role of Nation and State Institutions in Nigeria's Economy: An Empirical Review"

Muhammad Zakiy[1]

1 Universitas Muhammadiyah Yogyakarta

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This article lacks a strong theoretical foundation at the beginning. A more in-depth theoretical overview of the role of national and state institutions in the Nigerian economy could help readers better understand the context. The article could start by providing a clear theoretical context regarding the role of institutions in the economy, especially in the Nigerian context. This will assist in guiding readers towards empirical findings.

While there are empirical references, this article could be strengthened by including direct empirical data, such as economic statistics or recent survey results, that support the described findings. Incorporating more empirical data and case studies will bolster the arguments in the article. It can also provide concrete illustrations of how these institutions contribute to the Nigerian economy.

The article could provide a more comprehensive theoretical foundation on the role and significance of national and state institutions in economic development. This could encompass economic theories or relevant key concepts. Furthermore, the article can offer details about the policy implications of the described findings. How can the proposed policies be implemented more concretely?

There are some sections that require revision to ensure consistency in language use and terminology. For instance, in sections 5 and 6, there are terms that could be adjusted for a more appropriate context. The article can be reviewed to ensure consistency in language, grammar, and terminology use. This will ensure that the article gives a professional impression and is well understood by readers.

Some parts of this article use references without citing their original sources. It is important to ensure that every claim or finding is supported by the appropriate references.