

Review of: "Treading the Thin Line Between Health Ethics and Patient Care in the Application of Telemedicine: The Case of Sound Ethical Guidelines in Telemedicine in Sub-Saharan Africa"

Aditya Mahamkali¹

¹ University of the Cumberlands

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Reviews

Treading the Thin Line Between Health Ethics and Patient Care in the Application of Telemedicine: The Case of Sound Ethical Guidelines in Telemedicine in Sub-Saharan Africa.

Absence of Methodology Justification: The segment addressing the methodology in the paper lacks a comprehensive rationale for employing telemedicine in the healthcare sector. Including additional elaboration on why telemedicine was selected and its alignment with the study's objectives would enhance contextual clarity. The absence of such information may raise queries regarding the credibility and dependability of your approach, thus diminishing readers' trust in your conclusions.

Discussion/Results Incompleteness: Information regarding the ethical considerations and care aspects of telemedicine findings would have filled in some of the missing details. A deeper analysis in the discussion of results would enhance the interpretation of your findings, offering a more thorough understanding of the implications of your work.

Conclusion: The conclusions would benefit from being more succinct and precise.