

Review of: "A Study on Consumers' Perception of Food Delivery Platforms"

Ozlem Karaca Akkan¹

¹ Dokuz Eylül University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to review this research paper.

The subject is interesting, manuscript is written in crisp language, however, it is useful to be made some improvement. First of all the respondent group is very restrictive. Selecting much inclusive respondents, such as young, adults, educated, non-educated, people with disabilities and elderly people, can show the true and reliable results and shed light to food delivery platform developers also restaurants and deliverers between restaurants and end users.

Overall the manuscript, it can be added table, chart, figure and classification for better presentation and understanding. For example what kind of types are available at food delivery platforms or applications, how can they be classified?

By categorizing the questionnaire questions according to four Mobile Commerce key characteristics, and then presenting them grouping in different colors for each characteristic may attract the attention of the reader. These can provide better presentation.

Best wishes