The manuscript discusses very important topics in the region—climate change and its impact on food security—but from a scientific point of view, it is better to include what the author has to include from his own ongoing results. What we have here is a collection of data from different sources. If it is presented as a review paper, it would be better to include good sources for researchers. The author here presents a good technical report in a good manner. For me as a reviewer, I would like to see what the author can share with us regarding his own research results. If he wants to keep it as is, the manuscript should have more literature and should be resubmitted as a review paper. My suggestion to the author is to consider modifying your manuscript to a review one and focus on current statistical data in Egypt to be accepted. Good luck!
