

Review of: "Road Safety Perceptions and Practices among Undergraduate Medical Students"

Ashraf Hussain<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> University of Babylon

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Dear editor in chief, although the paper handle a very important health and social problem that study road accidents and users practice and attitudes, but I think the study had a non representative sample due to the followings

1. a purposeful sapling technique
2. very low response rate and hence the respondents may be those with high care about the safety which presented also by high female partition
3. relatively high rate of the respondents (>30%) have no vehicle to drive and those already may have a positive attitude toward road safety.

so I think the study represents itself and its sample and cannot be generalized regards