This research is of great significance by identifying a model with more accurate evaluations of essay structures. The results may provide eveident suggestions for AWE system developers. In the discussion session, I would expect the author's further explainations about why the Longformer model performed better in the current study than it did in Alkabool's study. Similarly, more evidence about the statement in the conconclusion "fine-tuning the Longformer models with the entire essay as input allowed the model to……, particularly in the Lead and Concluding Statement classes". The author seems not to have presented findings related to this statement in the previous sections.
