The theme addressed by the work is very interesting and current all over the world.

The work proposes an unusual perspective on the subject by referring to the Ayurveda culture, to the ethical principle of ahimsa, as outlined in Jain, Buddhist, and Hindu philosophical traditions.

The article also talks about the conflict between the principles of bioethics, beneficence and autonomy.

The concluding considerations would require further study to better understand the point of view of the authors in relation to the broad discussion on the conflict that arises in religious doctors when faced with the patient's need for autonomy.
