The article is not solely dedicated to Electricity Distribution Companies as it claims. The factors are general and can be similarly used in any other industries. Therefore, the first objective of the study is not correct. Moreover, the classification of the factors into 4 groups, including human, environmental, etc., cannot accurately partition the whole set. In other words, the conceptual model of identification and classification of factors is not clear and shows overlaps. The questionnaires are not explained sufficiently, so one cannot find the sources of the material where the questions/criteria are collected from, whether from experts or elsewhere. The validity of the questions and the reliability of the questionnaires are not reported. On the basis of the above corrections, the conclusions need to be rewritten.
