A very interesting topic and a very useful piece of research for those professionals caring for people with autism, as many implications for the intervention and rehabilitation of children with autism can be found from this work.

From my point of view, the following tips could help improve the article:

- Write the abstract with the following parts: introduction, objectives, method, results, and conclusions.
- Complete and structure the method section: participants, instruments, procedure, and data analysis.
- The Discussion section appears to be a theoretical framework rather than a discussion. Although both research and studies are cited, no comparison is made between the results of previous research and yours, nor are the results discussed. The text refers a lot to the benefits of climbing from the point of view of motor skills and motor disabilities, but it should also include more information about autism and social skills.
