This study includes a survey, which provides readers with important information about the career choices of young people in an understudied African country. The structure of the article is perfect and the methodology follows all the rules of epistemology and ethics. Moreover, the summary is comprehensive and gives all the required information. I believe that the text together with the photographic material can be published as it is, but the title of the article would be good to omit the names of the universities. In any case, the reader does not immediately understand that it is two universities. I would suggest using the phrase: "research in two Ghanaian universities" in the title.
